The 3-Day Kettlebell Beginner Program

One bell. Your garage. 45 minutes. The foundation a real practice is built on. Run it for 4 weeks.

WELCOME

How to Use This

This is the program I'd give a buddy who walked into my garage and said he wanted to start training kettlebells.

Three days a week. One bell. 45 minutes. Same workouts every week. Repeat for 4 weeks.

The goal is the basics, done with intent, for long enough that they become yours. The movements stay the same week to week. What changes is how they feel and how clean they look.

Most people quit a program because it's too complicated. This one is simple on purpose.

BEFORE YOU START

Bell Sizing · Safety

WHAT BELL TO BUY

Most men: start with a 16kg / 35lb bell.
Recovering, deconditioned, or coming back from injury: 12kg / 26lb.
Already strong, athletic background: 20kg / 44lb.

One bell is enough. You don't need a rack. Rogue, Kettlebell Kings, or any cast-iron bell with a smooth handle finish. Avoid vinyl-coated or "competition" bells for a starter.

DON'T GET HURT

Set the bell down with two hands and a hinge. Never drop it on a hard floor.

If a movement causes sharp pain, stop. Soreness is fine. Sharp pain is not.

Train barefoot or in flat shoes. No running shoes. Cushioned heels mess up your hinge.

Warm up every session. Skip it once and you'll know why.

The Schedule

Three sessions a week. A common pattern is Monday / Wednesday / Friday with rest days in between, but any 3 non-consecutive days work. The rest days matter as much as the training days.

10 MINUTES BEFORE EVERY SESSION

The Warm-Up

UNDENIABLE NICK

The same warm-up every day. Don't skip it. This is what keeps the joints healthy when you start training under load.

Cat-Cow: 8 reps

Wall Tibialis Raise: 20 reps

Deep Squat Hold + Thoracic Reach: 30 seconds + 5 reaches / side

World's Greatest Stretch: 4 reps / side

Wall Slide: 10 reps

Single-Leg Glute Bridge: 8 reps / side

Hip 90/90 Transition: 5 reps / side

Bird Dog: 8 reps / side

FORM NOTE

Warm-ups are deliberate. Slow and clean. They are not the workout. The point is to wake up the joints, get the spine moving, and bring blood to the tissue you're about to load.

COOL-DOWN · 5 MINUTES

Couch Stretch: 60 seconds / side

Child's Pose: 60 seconds

Lying Spinal Twist: 30 seconds / side

DAY 2 · 45 MINUTES

Strength

UNDENIABLE NICK

Heavier loads, fewer reps, longer rest. This is the day where you push the bell. Last set of every movement should be a real grind.

Squat Goblet Split Squat	Hinge KB Romanian Deadlift	Push (Chest) KB Floor Press
Push (Shoulder) KB Strict Press	Pull Single-Arm Row + Curl	Core Russian Twist + Hollow

WARM-UP · 10 MINUTES

Run the standard warm-up sequence (page 3).

MAIN CIRCUIT · 25 MINUTES

KB Russian Twist: 30 seconds

Hollow Hold: 30 seconds

COOL-DOWN · 5 MINUTES

Couch Stretch: 60 seconds / side

Child's Pose: 60 seconds

Lying Spinal Twist: 30 seconds / side

DAY 3 · 45 MINUTES

Flow

UNDENIABLE NICK

A flow is a sequence of movements done back-to-back without setting the bell down. The bell stays in your hand the entire round. This is what separates a kettlebell workout from a circuit.

THE RULE

Set the bell down only at the end of a round. Not between movements. If you have to put it down mid-round, the bell is too heavy or the round is too long — pick a lighter bell.

WARM-UP · 10 MINUTES

Run the standard warm-up sequence (page 3).

MAIN FLOW · 25 MINUTES

5 rounds. Rest 90 seconds between rounds. The bell never leaves your hand during a round.

KB Swing (two-handed): 5 reps

Goblet Squat: 5 reps — catch the swing into goblet

KB Halo: 3 reps / direction

Goblet Reverse Lunge: 3 reps / side

Goblet Squat: 5 reps

KB Swing (two-handed): 5 reps

One round = the full sequence above without setting the bell down. Roughly 60-90 seconds.

FINISHER · 5 MINUTES

4 rounds. Rest 30 seconds between rounds.

KB Calf Raise: 12 reps

Plank: 30 seconds

COOL-DOWN · 5 MINUTES

Couch Stretch: 60 seconds / side

Child's Pose: 60 seconds

Lying Spinal Twist: 30 seconds / side

THE REAL RULE

Train With Intention

The rep counts in this program are guides. They are not rules.

The real rule is this: every working set should be hard.

If 12 reps feel easy, the bell is too light. If you can't get 8 reps with clean form, the bell is too heavy. The last set of every movement should be a grind. You should be winded. You should question whether you can finish.

> NICK CHIASSON

If you finish a session feeling like you could have done more, you should have.

Train from feel. Just don't lie to yourself. Most people undertrain because real intent is uncomfortable. The discomfort is the work.

NUTRITION

On Food

Most fitness programs come with a meal plan. This one doesn't.

Eat whole foods. Prioritize protein. Stop counting calories.

If you've never paid attention to your food, track for two weeks to learn what you're actually eating. Most people are surprised. After that, stop and trust your body.

BUILD MEALS AROUND THESE

Meat · Eggs · Fish · Dairy

Fruit · Vegetables · Rice · Potatoes

THE RULE

When you build meals around real food and lead with protein, your body won't let you overeat.

No ultra-processed food. That's it.

The body's hunger and fullness signals work. They've been broken by ultra-processed food, not by biology. Take the engineered food out and the signals come back.

HONEST

What This Doesn't Cover

This is a starter. After 4 weeks, you've outgrown it.

What this program doesn't include:

- How to add weight (when, by how much, in what order)
- Progressions beyond the basic moves — snatches, get-ups, pistols, double bell work
- How to work around an injury or imbalance
- How to integrate cardio, mobility blocks, or skill work
- The full training block I run for myself

Those are the things that turn a starter into a real training practice. They're the difference between a generic program and one built for you.

When you're ready for that, that's coaching.

What's Next

Train it. Repeat it for 4 weeks. If you film a session, tag @undeniablenick — I see every one and reply when I can.
